

Dean Jolly is a student at Louisiana State University in his final semester studying Agricultural Business. His experience in the agricultural sector involves working as an agricultural crop consulting aid for various sugarcane farmers across Louisiana where he gained valuable knowledge concerning crop production, distribution, and manufacturing and improved skills such as cost-benefit analysis. Additionally, he has held jobs as an outdoor operations worker for multiple nurseries in the Baton Rouge area. Dean has also benefited from his participation in the NYFEA Agriculture's Promise Conference in Washington, D.C. and the PMA Fresh Summit Career Pathways Program in Anaheim, California where he made connections in the agricultural industry. Dean is the vice president of Geaux Green gardening club at LSU, a notetaker for students in Disability Services, and is a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. Upon earning his B.S., Dean plans to enroll into law school and eventually embark on a career pertaining to agricultural policy and regulation.
