

Ross Good is a senior Agribusiness student at Clemson University with an emphasis in Economics. He strives to promote local agriculture and to achieve knowledge and experience in farm financial management in order to ensure financial stability and success for small and large scale operations. Ross' experience in agriculture includes interning for a dairy herd leasing company based in Melbourne, AUS as well as working as a grower for an organic greenhouse specializing in tomatoes close to where he grew up in south central Pa. At Clemson, Ross is the current president of the Agribusiness Club, past treasurer for an agricultural and professional fraternity, Alpha Gamma Rho, and is active on the Dean's Student Advisory Board for the College of Agriculture. In his free time, Ross enjoys hunting and fishing on lakes in Upstate SC. He would like to thank the Southeast Produce Council for supporting his education and career goals.
